UM FORESTRY PROFESSOR RECEIVES $15,000 HARVARD FELLOWSHIP

MISSOULA --

University of Montana forestry Professor David Jackson has received a $15,000 Charles Bullard Fellowship in Forest Resources for study during the 1986-87 academic year at Harvard University.

Jackson, a specialist in forest economics policy management and a member of the UM faculty since 1976, says he will use his sabbatical leave from the university to update his training in policy analysis. He plans to pursue his post-graduate studies primarily in Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

In addition to completing formal coursework, Jackson will use the fellowship to improve his work relations with colleagues in the Northeast through visits to forestry schools and research facilities.

Jackson earned a doctorate in forest resources in 1975 from the University of Washington and was on the University of Alberta faculty from 1974 to 1976.
